On the Edge of the Abyss: Impacts of Early Contact in Native America (1500-1600)

Have you ever wondered about what the Native Americans thought about the Europeans? This presentation will discuss how the Native Americans rationalized the existence of Europeans. In addition, it will dive into how this contact effected the Native Americans communities east of the Mississippi.

*Available as a 1-part presentation.

Christophe Boucher received his Ph.D. from the University of Kansas in 2001. His research and teaching interests are Native American History, History of the American West, Atlantic World History and French Colonial America. He is currently revising a book manuscript on the early history of the Wyandots, a Northern Iroquoian people who deeply influenced the history of the Great Lakes region until Removal.
